Plant “Signatures”

How Plants Communicate Their Uses to Us

The question that addresses the way that plants communicate their healing abilities to us has been one that has fascinated botanists, herbalists and scientists for centuries.

It is thought that a plant can be “read,” much like a person can be read. For example if we look at someone and see frown wrinkles around their mouth and eyes, our intuition might discern, depending on other variables, that the person was unhappy a good deal of the time.

A plant also communicates information to us through various signs, a theory that is known as the “Doctrine of Signatures.” Our flower of the month, Common Thistle holds a bold and definite plant signature. When one looks at the photograph of Thistle below, the idea of protection and healthy boundaries comes to the intuitive sensibilities of the mind.

Another good example of the “Doctrine of Signatures” at work is through the flower called Chinese Lantern or Bladder Cherry. The pod of this plant resembles a bladder and its color is orange. Orange is a very healing color, vibrates around the area of the bladder (second chakra), and this flower has been prescribed for centuries as a diuretic.

The more that you work to communicate with the flowers, the better your intuition will serve you to read and interpret their unique service to humanity.

Many believe that there was an ancient civilization that predicted that humanity would at some point in its history, have a downfall that would cloud our auric fields with negative patterns and imprints that would compromise our abilities to stay healthy and be the Light Gods and Goddesses we were meant to be.

This forward thinking ancient civilization wanted to make sure that the solution to this problem would be available to aware and earth loving humankind on a widespread basis and put the solutions to negative pattern imbalances into the flowers’ electromagnetic properties.

Thistle

Cirsium Maticu sp.

Flower of the Month

Thistle helps us to see, with greater clarity, how we establish boundaries, especially boundaries related to taking on responsibility.

Many of us, through a sense of societal duty, or just plain guilt, take on responsibilities that really don't help us to heal or evolve.

Eventually these responsibilities wear us down and sap our precious energy, leaving us too tired to assume projects and goals that would nourish our soul.

This flower assists us to examine and question each of the ways that we utilize our energies and how those choices affect our lives.

I see the sphere of thorny projections as the protective shield that then allows the spiritual aspects of our lives (the purple flower radiating out in an upward direction, having transcended the difficulties of staying focused on our spiritual path) to unfold and manifest in unapologetic beauty. §

A Swiss doctor in Renaissance times popularized the “Doctrine of Signatures” through his widespread healing activities. This physician’s name was Theophrastus Bombastus Von Hohenheim who eventually became better known as Paracelsus. Paracelsus was educated in botany, mineralogy, natural philosophy and the occult. He was fired from his position at the University of Basel for disrespect for the establishment.

He considered the appearance of a plant to be a divine sign of its curative powers. This doctrine has been an enduring theme for herbal medicine almost continuously since the Renaissance period. Not only can it be educational, but it is also great fun to look at a plant and try to discern how it is trying to communicate its healing qualities to us.

If you are comfortable in meditation or quiet contemplation, an even richer spectrum of information about the plant will be available to you. Quieting the mind’s chatter allows you to connect with the plants energetic properties, which the plant projects on to your mind in a very direct way, much like absorbent white watercolor paper accepts a wash of color from a paint brush. As you work to raise your conscious awareness, your ability to discern more refined healing features of a flower will increase.

Some of the plant signature concepts relate to color interpretations, sacred geometry, location of plant and other complex details. The signature of a plant called Bloodroot is the red ooze that drips from its roots. Bloodroot’s role in healing humanity is to help us to see our ancestral lineage in a positive light and to understand our own genetic expertise and why we were born into the earth family parents that we have. Bloodroot has a gorgeous, pure white flower with a red stem. White colors almost always will indicate purification and raising our vibrational purity and frequency to higher frequencies.

Queen Anne’s Lace crowds fields and roadsides all through North America. Each flower head is an intricate composition of perhaps 500 miniature flowers and at the very center of this cluster of white flowers is one tiny, deep purple flower. The color frequency of purple is related to the 3rd eye chakra and this tiny central purple dot reminds us of an eye and is said to be the “eye” of the flower.

It, therefore, is helpful for eye problems related to the third eye. If you dig the roots up and lay the root, stem and flower out horizontally, the whole plant looks like the elongated version of the whole human eye structure. One can therefore also project that this flower is meant to assist the physical aspects of health for the complex eye organ system as well. This flower essence is excellent for all aspects of eye health, including improving our vision.

The “Doctrine of Signatures” is an excellent tool for broad-based interpretations of a plant’s potential abilities. Through meditation and quiet contemplation, sensitive individuals can glean even more detailed information. As consciousness is raised, many with clairvoyant abilities are awakening, allowing them to see the plants path through the etheric energy system and helping us to master our ability to fully communicate with the flowers whose deva energies are so anxious to assist us to heal and evolve. §

How to Care for Your Flower Essences.

Because our flower essences come with energetically alive devas, it is only natural to want to take good care of them. Every flower essence that we bottle is preserved with red schiso and also with two mantras. One mantra energizes the formula, much like if it was put in a pyramid and the other assists in the preservation. We have several clients that don't like the vinegar taste of red schiso and so we just preserve with the mantra.

The bottles are then wrapped in an indigo blue tissue that symbolically represents the Angels of the Blue Ray whom we ask to protect the essences while they are in transit. Each tissue is sealed with a depiction of a deva (our logo).

We take lots of steps to protect our essences but once you unwrap them, it is up to you to take care of them. It is better not to put them on top of computers or televisions or other electrical devices.

It is a good idea to keep them in a closed location like a kitchen cupboard especially if there are a lot of chaotic vibrations around your house. Another nice place to keep them is on an altar. I think keeping a quartz crystal cluster near them is wonderful as well.

When you are taking your essences, be careful not to let the dropper touch your tongue. If it does, do not put the dropper back into the bottle until you have let it be under cold running water for 1 minute, with the intention of clearing any contamination. You see your tongue holds an imprint pattern that is different from the flower essence imprint pattern.

Taking the essences in a glass of water reduces the possibility of contamination. Your flower essences will maintain their energetic imprint for at least a year if properly cared for. Be sure to take the full dosage suggested so that the energetic shift will hold. §

The Feeling of Your Hands in the Clay.... By Abraham-Hicks

There are no happier people on this planet than those who decide that they want something,
define what they want,
get hold of the feeling of it even before it's manifestation, and then joyously watch the unfolding,
as piece by piece, by piece it begins to unfold.
That's the feeling of your hands in the clay.

Protection Combination Formula

This formula contains 17 essences that give unparallel protection to the energy field. This formula includes protection from man-made dissonance in the airwaves. It gives electro-magnetic buffering as well as adjustment to atmospheric changes. It includes essences that protect against negative astral energies.

There are essences for those that "hook" into your field and are sapping your energy. There are flowers in this formula that help you to improve your discernment abilities and help you solve situations where you feel you are under psychic attack. There is an essence here that protects from mutations (viruses are an example) that are not supporting our energy field. Of course the spiritual realms guidance keeps it beautiful, the first essence they asked me to include is Hardhack which improves our ability to love ourselves unconditionally, therefore assisting us to also love others unconditionally.

Protection Combination Formula contains over 21 flower essences and one semi-precious stone. It will give energetic protection to many different layers of your energy field. It is especially useful for sensitive people who are affected by electrical devices.

Protection Combination Formula also includes 3 Orchid Essences that offer deep and profound protection for our energy field. Thistle, which is our flower of the month, is for the establishment of personal boundaries and is very good for people who feel they must take on every responsibility that comes their way. It helps us to recognize the false responsibilities in our lives (the ones that no longer are serving us). Turquoise is a semi-precious gem that is placed in the formula to complement the flowers and serves as protection on several energetic levels. §
